From the Religious Herald. ON MAN'S MORTALITY.

Like the fair rose, in verdant pride, Or like the never slumbering tide, Or like the blossom, fresh and gay, Or like the early dawn of day; Or like the cloud, mid tempest high, That floats across the stormy sky,— E'en such is man, the heir of sorrow! Alive to-day and dead to-morrow! The blushing rose soon fades away, His course the ocean will not stay, The blossom fades, the tempest flies, And man, the child of frailty dies.

Or like a tale that soon is told, Or like a meadow gemmed with gold, Or like a bird with plumage gay, Or like the dew-drop pearls of May, Or passing hour, or fleeting span, Ben such, in all his pride, is man. The grass decays, the tale is ended, The bird is flown, the dew ascended, The span is short, the hour is past, And his long home man seeks at last.

Or like a bubble in the the brook, Or glass, in which vain man doth look, Or shuttle sent from hand to hand, Or letters written on the sand, Or like a thought, or like a dream, Or like an ever-gliding stream, E'en such is man, who soon will know That all is vanity below. Bubbles our wasting lives betoken, The shuttle drops, the glass is broken; No letters traced on sand remain, Our dreams are brief, our thoughts are vai And like the stream that passes by, So man, who only lives to die.

Like Autumn's leaf, or like the snow, Or like the journey man doth go; Or like the river's flow and ebb, Or like the patient spider's web; Or like the fruit, or like the flower, Or like the short-lived April shower,-E'en such is man, who toils to gain The chaff of the immortal grain! The leaf decays, the snow is past, The roughest journey ends at last, The web is torn, the shower is o'er, The fruit delights the taste no more; The flower fades, the flood's suspended, Man's hour is some, and life is ended.

Or like an arrow through the air, Or like the lightning's sudden glare, Or like the vapor of the sky, Or like the goal for which we try, Or like the minstrel's pleasant song, Which we, though vain, would still prolong: E'en such is life, with all its cares, Fast floating down the tide of years! The arrow soon to earth declines, The lightning but a moment shines, He stops who doth most sweetly sing. The cloud is ever on the wing; The race, tho' hard, will soon be o'er, And living man be seen no more!

If everything above, below, Aloud doth mortals' frailty show; If we ere long must take our flight From this revolving day and night, And our eternal portion be In realms of joy or misery-Let us no more in trifles spend The life which must so shortly end-But while the sun salutes our eyes, To righteousness and God arise. Let each who has a soul to save, Extend his views beyond the grave, And while salvation still is nigh, To Christ, the friend of sinners, fly. So, when this fleeting state is o'er, And time with us shall be no more; When e'en the elements around Shall in consuming flames be found, Upheld by faith, we will not fear, For our redemption draweth near.
